Fourth Quarter 2025

President's Letter

Greetings fellow Chevron Retirees,

Last quarter I promised to work with Chevron to make CRA more visible to current employees, attract and retain recent retirees, continue to provide support to our members and offer programs to enhance retirement – all while maintaining a balanced budget. Our committee chairs are working diligently to fulfill these lofty goals. Most visible in these efforts is that of the budget committee who presented a balanced budget for approval to all CRA Directors. It was voted upon and passed. We will work very hard to live within it this year.

Chevron recently closed the deal to purchase HESS. The task before us is to obtain the names and addresses of the HESS retirees so we can welcome them into our organization and the family of Chevron Retirees. We are working on this issue as this edition is going to press.

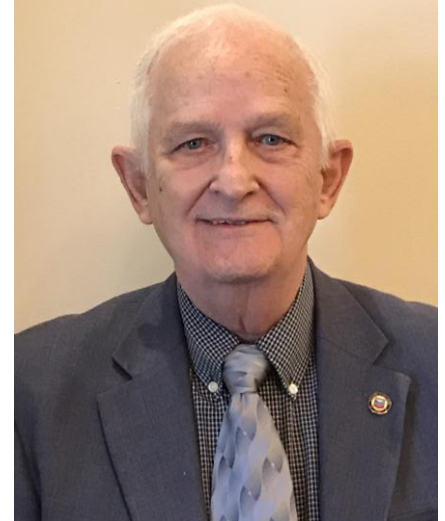

Our next Annual Meeting is to be held in Calgary, Alberta from May 18 – 21, 2026. This promises to be a beautiful time to visit the Canadian Rockies. I hope all of our chapter presidents, CRA Area Vice Presidents, Committee chairs, Officers, and Past Presidents can attend and bring their Spouse/Partner. Of course, the spouse/partner is mostly on their nickel but what a great way to score points on the home front.

You have an opportunity to contribute to Chevron's involvement in your community. Chevron offers up to $2,000 per retiree annually in financial contributions and one volunteer grant combined. For just 20 hours of your time at an approved non-profit, Chevron will donate $500 to that organization. On the average, that is less than one half hour a week; of course you typically have to work it in four hour shifts. How hard can that be over the course of a full year? The Chevron Humankind website has the official rules so please check there before turning in your request for the Chevron contribution, and make sure that it is done soon.

This may seem like a routine reminder, but it is very important. Don't forget to join the Chevron Advocacy Network, CAN. It is the best way we can support Chevron's business goals. We do this by encouraging our government officials to enact legislation that supports business. That's all for now. Stay tuned – talk to your fellow retirees – encourage them to join the CRA. We are a great group.

Retiree Spotlight – In each issue of Encore we spotlight retirees from chapters across the US and Canada. This time we focus on two retirees from opposite ends of the continent. Jeff St. Clair of the Highland Lakes Community of the Hill Country Chapter in South Texas spent many years as Court Appointed Special Advocate for Children and recently as one of the leaders of the Ark, which has been so active in recent relief efforts after the recent devastating floods. Bill Long of the Marin County Chapter in Northern California was honored by Novato as Citizen of the Year for over fifty years of service in support of open spaces and hiking trails. Very community conscious retirees, they also benefited their volunteer organizations for many years with Chevron Humankind cash contributions for their volunteer work and donations. Enjoy their stories!

A frequently requested item that we receive is for information on specific retiree deaths. We compile them for the most recent quarter received from Chevron HR and report those at the end of every Encore issue. This issue features those deceased in the second quarter of 2025, April-June. For more recently deceased information as available, or any deceased retiree deaths by name since November 2010, see FAQ under Resources in the National web at www.chevronretirees.org .

Natural gas growth drives progress

Sept. 4, 2025 Around the world, natural gas is a part of everyday life for many people, who use it for cooking, doing laundry and other household needs. It's also used to produce electricity—and it's necessary for things like manufacturing, fertilizer production and hydrogen generation. This abundant, reliable energy source -- often in the form of liquefied natural gas (LNG)—also supports economic growth. Demand for energy is rising, with U.S. electricity consumption projected to reach all-time highs in 2025 and 2026. Globally, electricity demand is expected to grow through 2026. Rising global energy demand is expected to be driven by economic growth, industrialization, and the increasing needs of artificial intelligence (AI). Natural gas is a good source of energy to power data centers needed for AI because it's scalable and affordable. To meet this demand, Chevron is currently expanding its global gas business.

For many consumers, natural gas is one of the more affordable energy sources available. And that's not all, said Brian Essner, Chevron's general manager of LNG origination. "If you think of the global energy system, it's a key component," Essner said. "When there's a failure or a change in how energy is provided to consumers, natural gas has the scale and is flexible enough to fill that gap." By 2040, U.S. households could save a total of $100 billion—or roughly $655 per household—thanks to the rising use of natural gas in electricity generation. That's according to the American Petroleum Institute, which reasons that lower natural gas prices will "lead to more natural gas consumption by power generators and lower wholesale and retail electricity prices."

Chevron's reputation as a reliable operator—coupled with its strategically placed LNG hubs worldwide—has helped give its LNG business a leading edge, said Essner. For 75 years, Chevron has partnered closely with Japan, particularly on LNG supply. With the Chevron-operated Gorgon and Wheatstone projects in Australia, plus the company's stake in the Northwest Shelf Project in the country, Chevron is among Japan's largest LNG suppliers. "This relationship with Japan helped build the investment support that enabled our large-scale projects like Gorgon and Wheatstone," said Makiko Matsukizono, Chevron's general manager for Japan in its LNG origination organization. "This is a testament to our commitment to powering progress and the global impact of our LNG business."

Chevron also has significant natural gas holdings spanning the Asia Pacific, the Eastern Mediterranean, and West Africa. In the U.S., its holdings range from the Permian and DJ basins to Chevron's expanding presence along the U.S. Gulf Coast. These holdings position Chevron to support the world's evolving energy mix and energy security needs. Chevron is contracted to export 7 million metric tons of LNG annually from the U.S. Gulf Coast, beginning in 2026. That's enough to power a U.S. city of more than 3 million people for approximately one year.

In fact, Chevron is engaged in every aspect of the natural gas business, spanning production, exploration, liquefaction, shipping, pipelines, marketing and trading, and power generation. "No single company or country can solve the energy trilemma—affordability, reliability and lowering carbon intensity—alone," said Freeman Shaheen, president of Chevron's global gas business. "We are working across the value chain with governments, customers, industry peers and technology partners to scale solutions that work."

Chevron Retiree Spotlights

Jeff St. Clair: Guiding the Ark

As a long-term Board member and volunteer at Ark of Highland Lakes, Texas, Jeff St. Clair is proud to practice the leadership, problem solving and teamwork skills he learned during his 35-year career at Chevron. Jeff and his wife Pam became involved with the organization in 2022, when it was known as the Highland Lakes Crisis Network. "I was impressed by the organization's support for communities affected by natural disasters and by its motto, 'Love God, love people,'" says Jeff.

The organization's concern for the dangers of flooding in its core area of Burnet and Llano counties helped lead to its renaming as the Ark of Highland Lakes in early 2025. A few months later, the renaming proved especially fortuitous, as Central Texas experienced its most devastating inland flooding in almost half a century. The Ark responded with compassion and efficiency that would have impressed that earlier Ark denizen, Noah. "The people of Burnet and Llano counties were especially hard-hit by the flooding, which came in two waves, causing fatalities and significant property damage," says Jeff. "The damage was extreme and we were needed everywhere." Immediate needs included doing the muck-up work on houses, apartments and mobile homes; and raising money for individuals who lost jobs, cars, and other possessions. The Ark is working to raise another $5m for home rebuilds/repairs.

One of Jeff's areas of responsibility involves the Ark's Warehouse, which provides food, supplies and other necessities to needy families and individuals.

"At the warehouse, we have more than 200 volunteers receiving supplies six days a week from the Hill Country and cities in and out of Texas," says Jeff. "Anyone in Burnet County who is impacted can come to our warehouse for clothes, furniture, food, cleaning supplies and other items." Jeff also co-leads the Ark's Transformational Living program, which helps provide housing for single Moms and children while assisting single mothers to "set goals, accept the need for accountability, and get out of poverty."

The Ark's effectiveness during the recent flooding led to its selection by the Burnet County Commissioner as fiduciary for monetary donations to assist in the recovery. Jeff is proud that other Chevron retirees from the region can provide financial support through the company's Matching Gifts program. Jeff makes clear that the Ark's mission isn't limited to catastrophic incidents, such as the recent flooding. "Throughout the year, we also support impoverished individuals with a range of needs, from food to dental care." Local dentists and technicians have donated their time to provide basic dental needs to hundreds of clients at no cost.

Advocating for children

Prior to joining the Ark, Jeff and his wife devoted six years to supporting the Highland Lakes Court Appointed Special Advocates for Children (CASA). Jeff and Pam managed seven cases involving 18 children and assisted CASA at numerous community events. The organization needed volunteers with skills to represent children across a wide spectrum of needs, including abuse, neglect, and cases in which parents were incarcerated," says Jeff. "We regularly met with the children, their parents, school counselors, therapists and lawyers to prepare to represent them in court." He continues, "I'm proud that I had the ability to connect with the children and hear their stories without ever changing the facts."

One memorable circumstance involved a mother with four children who had been incarcerated and was being denied custody. Jeff became involved in helping the woman get her life back in order. "We worked together and she did everything she needed to regain custody," Jeff recalls. "I'm still in touch with her and it's gratifying to see how she's helping her kids be successful." He adds, "I've been fortunate to have this kind of opportunity to work with people, whatever crisis they're confronting."

Bill Long: Blazing Trails

When Bill Long moved to California's Marin County as a Chevron employee in 1969, he quickly realized his calling as an advocate for the area's quality of life. Since then, as a volunteer for various organizations, his leadership has left a legacy of open spaces, trails, parks, clean water, recycling and waste reduction for generations to come.

One of his most noteworthy contributions has grown out of his service on the Bay Area Ridge Trail Council as a member of its board for more than 30 years, including about 15 of those years as chair. When Bill joined the organization in 1994, California's Bay Area Ridge Trail extended for 165 miles. Today, it spans almost 415 miles, and Bill isn't done yet. He hopes to help extend the trail for another 100 miles or more. And he is currently working with U.S. Representative Jared Huffman of California to have the trail designated as a National Scenic Trail – a rare designation shared by just 11 U.S. trails singled out for their recreational opportunities and for the conservation of the significant scenic, historic, natural, or cultural qualities of the areas through which they pass.

"Preserving and enjoying Marin's open space has been my passion ever since I arrived here more than 50 years ago," says Bill. While pursuing a rewarding career at Chevron, Bill found time to devote numerous hours to volunteer activities, which grew out of his early love of sailing and hiking and his more recent role as a Boy Scout leader. One early activity involved his work on the ballot measure that successfully created the Marin County Parks and Open Space District in 1972, after which he served on its commission for ten years.

More recently, Bill played a major role in the 2008 creation of the Marin Open Space Trust, which works with public agencies to protect natural lands from development. The trust helped preserve a Pacheco Valle meadow, Bald Hill in Ross and, more recently, about 100 acres in Fairfax.

"Those have all been very satisfying because at the end of the day, after you've done all the work, it's not just a stack of paper; it's a piece of property for the public to have and enjoy," Bill says. "By creating the Open Space Trust, we were able to work with local communities and acquire land that can be turned into public parks."

Bill has also been an advocate for clean water, taking an active role as a Board member of the Novato Sanitary District. "After I joined the district's board in 2000, we recognized the need to build a new wastewater treatment plant," says Bill. "Because of my engineering background, I was helpful in planning and completing the design of the plant, which was built on top of the old one."

Bill also advocated for water recycling and was instrumental in the creation and success of the North Bay Water Reuse Authority. The program, which began in 2002, involves a collaboration of 11 public agencies to recycle water, build capacity and increase the resiliency of the area's water supply.

"During this period, I became an informal lobbyist, making 10 trips to Washington, D.C. to seek support for new wastewater treatment plants," says Bill.

His volunteer activities have earned him various accolades. In 2003, the Chevron Retirees Association recognized him for his work on the Bay Area Ridge Trail and other environmentally related projects.

And in February 2025, he was recognized as the City of Novato's Citizen of the Year. During a ceremony in his honor, County Supervisor Eric Lucan said, "Bill has been a dedicated volunteer and advocate for Novato for over 50 years, leading initiatives that have improved environmental sustainability, flood control and open space preservation. His contributions in Novato, Marin and the greater Bay Area benefit us all now and will be felt for years to come."

As he ponders his many achievements, Bill continues to have new goals for the trails, the open spaces, and the quality of life in Marin County. His goals are tempered by the fact that "at age 88, I recognize my limits." Still, his impressive years of volunteerism suggest that he'll continue to find a way to advance his goals for the region.

Medicare Fraud & Abuse

As open enrollment nears, it's time to be aware of Medicare fraud and abuse. Common signs of abuse include billing for unnecessary or excessive services and supplies, upcoding (billing for a more expensive service than what was provided), or failing to provide necessary services. Unsolicited offers of "free" items or services that you didn't request, and pressure to provide your Medicare number over the phone, are also common scam tactics that can indicate abuse or fraud.

How to Spot Medicare Abuse & Fraud

- Review your statements carefully: Check your Medicare Summary Notices (MSNs) or Explanation of Benefits (EOBs) for any charges that don't match the services or items you received.
- Watch for unsolicited offers: Be wary of unsolicited offers for medical equipment, supplies, or genetic testing, especially if they are promoted as "free".
- Be suspicious of high-pressure tactics: Scammers may try to pressure you to pay bills immediately, provide your Medicare number, or join a new plan, threatening to cancel your coverage if you don't comply.
- Guard your personal information: Never give your Medicare number, Social Security number, or bank account information to someone you don't know or trust.
- Look for unnecessary services or supplies: A provider might order excessive tests or medications that you don't need.
- Beware of incorrect billing: This can include charges for services that were never provided, or overcharge by billing Medicare for more expensive services than were actually performed.
- Routinely waiving co-insurance or deductibles: Waivers are only allowed on a case-by-case basis where there is financial hardship, not as an incentive to attract business.

Medicare Changes for 2026

In 2026, Medicare will introduce significant updates aimed at improving access, affordability, and oversight across its programs. One of the most notable changes is the cap on out-of-pocket costs for Medicare Part D prescription drugs, which will be limited to $2,100 annually. After reaching this threshold, beneficiaries will no longer pay copayments or coinsurance for covered drugs for the remainder of the year. Additionally, Medicare will expand coverage for Advanced Primary Care Management services, ensuring that beneficiaries receive more personalized and coordinated care, including 24/7 access to their care team¹. These changes are part of a broader effort to enhance preventive care and chronic condition management.

The Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) also issued a proposed rule to strengthen the Medicare Advantage (MA) and Part D programs. This includes new guardrails for the use of artificial intelligence in prior authorization decisions to prevent inappropriate care denials. CMS is also working to improve behavioral health access, expand coverage for anti-obesity medications, and refine marketing practices to protect consumers from misleading information. These updates reflect the commitment to ensuring that Medicare plans deliver high-quality, equitable care while reducing unnecessary barriers.
